Family Experiences in Childhood Scale (FECS)

Anabel Gonzalez, Dolores Mosquera & Andrew M. Leeds, 2010

Important question for interviewers and therapists

This scale contains many items regarding early trauma and attachment disruptions. To read and score these items can be very difficult for severely traumatized people. Other people may seem apparently comfortable or compliant, but during or after filling out the scale, they can be overloaded by traumatic memories they are not prepared to cope with.

It is the therapist’s or interviewer’s responsibility to choose the right moment for the patient to answer this scale, and to give them the adequate containment and support (during and after). This scale shouldn’t be used as a routine screening without clinical control.
Family Experiences in Childhood Scale (FECS)

Anabel Gonzalez, Dolores Mosquera & Andrew M. Leeds, 2010

These questions refer to the people that have taken care of you from your date of birth to the age of 15. If some else that was not your parents, has been your tutor please briefly explain who took care of you in that period of time. Answer the initial questions regarding to those people.

Answer these questions regarding only to the people who took care of you or the people that you lived with. Don’t include relatives or any other kind of relationship, (except in some items when it’s specifically marked).

If you have been taken care by various people during different times of this 15 year period, consult the therapist about how to score this scale.

To answer, circle the percentage that represents your experience.

Some of these questions refer to difficult situations, which you may have experienced. If answering any of these questions is overwhelming for you, please let your therapist know so s/he will help you to approach these issues in the best way possible. Don’t force yourself in anyway.
